The Junction Hotel is named for its position at the junction of the historic Grahamstown and Shortland – the two towns having merged in 1874. The town was initially founded during the gold rush, following the discovery of gold in the Kuranui Stream, on August the 10th 1867 by William Hunt. The subsequent influx of miners saw

Thames become the largest centre of population in New Zealand in the late 19th century, with over 18000 inhabitants and 100 hotels (including the one you're sitting in now)

While its days as a mining boom town have long since passed and most of the hotels are long since gone – Thames now basks in a history as rich and colourful as anywhere in New Zealand. So after you've enjoyed a drink and a meal with us, take a while to explore the town, its history and its stories
